

Sinclair Corporation should not be allowed to use public broadcasting channels to air a documentary that has nothing to do with local news, and, in fact, serves to endorse a specific political opinion.

We must respect public trust and prevent conflicts of interests in broadcasting as is expressed in the decision to air a documentary on a political candidate days before an election.

As the laws of implied guarantee assure me that upon opening a box of Cornflakes I should expect to find Cornflakes--not a box of smelly rats, I should, by public trust, also expect to find, when I turn on my local newschannel, local news --not federal campaign propaganda.
